“ I began working with Kleeneze nine years ago in the evenings and on the weekend around my full-time job. I thought that joining the business would be a good way to get some exercise – I’m diabetic, and so it’s important that I keep active – and earn a little extra money. I’ve since retired, and my wife Margaret and I now both work with Kleeneze, making around £1,400 a month between us.

The flexible hours suit us down to the ground, meaning we can visit our grandchildren, who live a long way away from us, at the drop of a hat. We also enjoy the social elements of the job, and our team meetings are always great fun. ”

“ My husband John was made redundant from his job nine years ago after some health problems, so we joined Kleeneze to make up for some of the financial loss. A few months later, I was also made redundant from my job with a high street bank. Rather than try to find another job, which I knew would be difficult given my age, we decided to concentrate on building our Kleeneze business instead.

We now have our own team of distributors, and make upwards of £1000 every four weeks, working flexible hours. Combined with our pension, the money we make with Kleeneze provides us with a more than comfortable lifestyle.

I believe Kleeneze is a fantastic business especially for people of our age in this current economic climate, and I would definitely recommend that people take a serious look at the business and its potential. ”

“ Around 2001, I was becoming dissatisfied with my work after 25 years in teaching. At the same time, my husband Terry’s business was suffering slightly. That’s when we saw an ad for Kleeneze in the local paper and decided to give it a go. We began by working part-time hours around our regular jobs, and, in 2003, it became clear that we were making enough money to work on the business full-time.

We bring home around £1,000 to £1,500 a month, and have enjoyed Kleeneze company conferences in both Barcelona and Prague. We love the flexible hours and the fact that we can work as and when we choose. ”
